Among the pleasantest receptions on Saturday was that of Mrs. Admiral Goldsborough, who was assisted by Mrs. Senator Carpenter, Mrs. Dr. Sutherland, U. S. A., and Mrs. Byron G. Daniels. The Army, Navy annd Marine Corps were very largely represented, although many distinguished civilians called as well. An elegant table was set out, and choice wines and other refreshments were dispensed. Mrs. Admiral Goldsborough was attired in a rich black satin, with black lace trimmings. Mrs. Senator Carpenter was dressed with elegance and good taste; she wore a crimson moire antique, trimmed with point lace. Mrs. Dr. Sutherland wore a pearl-colored silk, handsomely trimmed. Mrs. Daniels wore a black silk, with a black lace overdress; her hair was very tastefully arranged and ornamented with flowers.

THE STORM AT THE NORTH.—The storm which was felt severely in this vicinity yesterwhich was felt severely in this vicinity yester-day appears to have raged with tremendous force north and west of us. Rivers have over-flown their banks and portions of railroads have been inundated. The Gunpowder river raised so high yesterday afternoon that the water came over the railroad bridge, and in consequence no trains left Baltimore for the North on the Phil-adelphia road last night, and the New York mail due here last night had not arrived at noon to-day. Nearly all the telegraph lines to the North and West are down, and consequently since Saturday night the news telegrams have been received very sparsely.

A CORRESPONDENT giver a very clear account of the Pietists of Germany, who accept the Orthodox creeds though with an allegorizing and spiritualizing liberty. They have a deep faith in Christ's spiritual presence in the Eucharist, and no less in all that concerns daily life. They use the crucifix in a way that seem ritualistic—placing it on their altars, bedsides, and bosoms. Their missionary fervor is a marked peculiarity, and the Basle Missionary Institute is manned by them.

THE PRACTICE of making New Year's calls is very rigidly followed in St. Petersburg, as it is in some parts of this country, but there is a way in which one may avoid it, and at the same time hold his position. He has only to give five or ten roubles to some recognized public charity, and have the donation acknowledged in the papaper on New Year's morning. He may then stay at home at his case, and his friends will take no offence.

Those who have married have shown good taste in having invariably selected beautiful women as wives; those who are unmarried never pass a pretty lady on the street without giving her a cheerful look. Each one of them in his respective line had manifested admirable taste and creditable pride in doing well whatever he had to do. Mr. Gilman referred humorously to the specialties of each of the leading members of the Richmond press, and closed with an eloquent culogy upon Thomas Ritchie as a veteran journalist of rare ability, and to the gifted and brilliant Hamden Pleasants. The names of American Senators, and those who have occupied high positions of trust and honor, in the course of time will be forgotten, but as journal-Visitors.

The banquet by the representatives of the Washington Press to the members of the Richmond Press Club, whose arrival and names were mentioned in our issue of Saturday, took place at "The Arlington," Saturday afternoon, and was probably the most elegant affair of the kind which has taken place in this city for many years. At 5 o'clock all assembled in the parfor assigned to them preparatory to the ban-quet, which was served in one of the large pri-vate dining rooms, under direction of Frank King, Esq., steward of The Arlington, whose ability as a caterer is well known. procession formed in the parlor, and marched to the dining hall to the music of Donche's Band, stationed in the room. All having been seated, the banquet was opened, and ample attention given to the excellent bill of fare. Colonel Florence then arose and welcomed the visitors in a handsome address, referring to the fact that they came from the old commonwealth which gave birth to the great and good Washington, and bidding them a fraternal welcome to the city bearing the honored name of the Father of our country. Thrice welcome to all and he unaffectedly bade them God-speed in the battle of life a heavy Now Year and many battle of life, a happy New Year, and many very many, pleasant returns of similar days, similar occasions and similar welcomes, and re ferred to the fact that social visits of gentlemen of the newspaper profession, making acquaint-ances which begin with characteristic comming-lings, lead invariably to the happiest results. He called attention to that forcible and truthful deciaration of one of the best English writers. "that in the hands of men entirely great the pen is mightier than the sword." All were now cultivating the arts of peace. Let us in our mission be faithful to the high purpose in hand. Away forever with all the emblems and ensigns of distress and disturbance. Now that "grim visaged war has smoothed his wrinkled front," let all forever keen it smooth throughout. keep it smooth throughout all our borders Col. Florence next paid a high compliment to the eminence of Virginians as journalists, and reminded them that in the fulfilment of their reminded them that in the landment of their high mission they might do much to diffuse sound and healthy suggestions, and spread abroad throughout the land, and to all the in-habitants thereof, wholesome thoughts of truth-that breathe and happy words of fire that burn. At Richmond they could put their hands upon At Richmond they could put their hands upon the lever that moves the political opinion of the entire South. He trusted that the experience of the Richmond gentlemen among their Washington brethren would ever be green in their memories and garnered up in their hearts. Col. Florence concluded by calling upon Arthur Shepherd, Esq., of the Republican, toast-master for the evening, to read the first toast, which was read as follows:

First Toast.—"Our Guests." Motto, "Gentlemen, you are welcome; may your journalistic plumage never moult a feather!"

Responded to by H. C. Tinsley, of the Richmond Associated Press, as follows:

mond Associated Press, as follows: REMARKS OF H. C. TINSLEY, ESQ. under most depressing circumstances. I understand that the committee of our own people had great doubts about my answering. One gentleman thought I would talk politics, and another hought I would not be able to talk at all [Laughter.] I cannot pretend to reply to the eloquent address of Colonel Florence; but what I want to say is, that I am entirely unprepared for the occasion. I intend, however, first, to talk a little politics. I wish to say that we ginia represented by our leading newspaper men. and if you want to talk both sides, the agent of the Associated Press will agree with you Laughter. Now, gentlemen, I want to tell you what happened when it was announced in Richmond, just before Thanksgiving day, that the Press Association of Washington were about to visit their brethren of Richmond. The idea of the press of the National Management of the press of the National Metropolis coming to a country town where there were no places o in a country town where there were no places of interest, no great public buildings, not even a theater, seemed preposterous. The newspaper men of Richmond had a meeting at my offict to take counsel, and I do not think there ever was a sadder set of men. One gentleman moved to appoint a committee of arrangements and several suggestions were offered, but nearly all seemed to think we could not give a proper reception. We went to work, however, with will, and with what result you know. The result was that, while we fell short in a great many things we did not a least fall at the second secon many things. we did not at least fall short in good will. [Applause.] And those who were despondent before Thanksgiving about how the now. They have been interviewing me all day laughter, asking me what on earth we can eve to to get even with this sort of thing? I do not know what they can do. They ask me to thank you for all the kindness you have shown to them I expected a friendly, cordial reception, but you have so far exceeded our anticipations that we are determined to express our grantude, but we are determined to fix you the next time. Se-riously, however, there is an hour coming for each and all of us, when all pleasant memories, the sincerest friendships, and the brightest scene-will fade into nothing; but until that hour does come to us we propose that the recollections of this visit grow brighter and brighter, and the friendships made and renewed here to-day shal-grow stronger and stronger until the end. Second Toast .- The Humors of Journalism Motto:

Motto:

"A little nonsense new and then Is relished by the Wisest men."
Responded to by Major Ben. Perley Poore.

REMARKS OF MAJOR POORE.

Major Poore in response made one of those after-dinner speeches calculated to "set the table in a roar," but which cannot be reported with any justice to the speaker. He said he wain the position of the Irish reporter who wawhipped for writing a local article, who, when asked how he liked it, replied that he thought it was an elegant whip, but he didn't like the cracker. He liked the toast, but not the motto.
He had been wated when he the committee He had been waited upon by the committee of twenty-seven over a month ago, who notified him that he was expected to reply to the above toast. He immediately went to work and endea-vored to prepare a speech; searched Charles Lamb's and Tom Moore's, and many other famous authors' works for the proper material and at last succeeded in completing a most admirable address, which he had put in type at the Globe office, and which occupies eighteen columns of that facetious paper. [Laughter.] He was opposed, therefore, to the motto, "A little nonsense now and then is relished by the wisest men."

Could he have presented a "great deal of non-sence," by reading his entire speech, the audi-ence would have found that it was divided into four parts, of which he could now only present the running-titles. 1st, Religious in which he had quoted St. Paul's opinion on reporters, who were anxious to hear and tell some new thing were anxious to hear and tell some new thing; described the assemblage where the reporters were so abundant that others "could not get in because of the press," and alluded to the last resting place of the profession, known as "Golgotha, for it is the place of dead-heads." 2d, Historical, on the banks of the Euphrates are now found the baked clay cylinders, on which the news gatherers of ancient Babylon inscribed their items in cuneiform characters, and we of the present day are consequently at times inclined to commemorate this custom of our ancestors by carrying bricks in our hats. 3d, Poetical, for which division of the great speech he had selected a humorous poem, written by Dr. Holmes, of Boston, which he thought would be appropriate, because it commences: appropriate, because it commences:

"Fair Florence, when I saw thee last."

But the fourth and medicinal view of the subject, like the quack advertisements in a country sheet, occupied the most space. "The humors of the Press." The young reporter has an item for notoriety,—the fighting editor is rash in his assertions,—the marine correspondent has a sat rheum for his accommodation when afloat,—the romantic reporter endures the small-post that he may be pitied,—and the Hibernian political writer indulges in patriotic eruptions after he indulges in the "crater."

There—continued Major Poore—I think I have satisfied you all that had it not been for that "gag-rule" in the motto to your toast, I could have given you "a great deal of nonsense." ect, like the qu could have given you "a great deal of nonsense," which you will find reported in my "entire and impromptu speech" in the Daily Globe, duly interspered with [Laughter,] [Cheers] and [Proterspered with [Laughter,] [Cheers] and [Prolonged Applause.]

Now, taking off the motley garb, with its cap and bells, he desired, as a Massachusetts newspaper man, to return his thanks to the Virginia newspaper men for the hospitable reception which he had enjoyed at Richmond on several public occasions. The descendants of the Puritans—their hearts in their hands and their hands in our hands, and had made us "at home" in Richmond. A grateful remembrance of this fraternal hospitality prompted him to offer as a sentiment. The Richmond Press Association—est perpetua, be thou eternal. [Applause.]

Third Toast—"Æsthetics in Journalism."—Motto—"A thing of beauty is a joy torever—more true of ideal than of material creations."

Responded to by W. S. Gilman, of Richmond,

A letter was here read from W. W. Corcoran, Esq., expressing his regret at not being able to be present.

The band performed a favorite air and the entertainment was ended about 9% o'clock.

The company then repaired to the National Theatre to witness the pantomime of "Jack and the Bean-Stalk," and were cordially received by Messrs. Spalding & Rapley. After the play the visitors and their entertainers proceeded to the establishment of Sebastian Aman, Esq., 8th street, near D, upon the invitation of that gentleman, who had prepared for the company, in his private dining rooms, a bountiful collation, which was partaken of with gusto. Aman wolmed his visitors and remarked:

To be pressed in a ceach, to be pressed in a car,
Is a press that is not at all precious;
But the press that is press-ent at this press-ent hour,
Makes us forget everything that may oppress us.

The company next proceeded to the establishment of Mr. Charles Godfrey, on E street, near 14th, where they were handsomely entertained by that gentleman, and about two o'clock yesterday morning they returned to the Arlington. About half of the visitors left for Richmond by the R. F. & P. R. R. yesterday morning, but the remaining half were taken in charge by their Washington brethren yesterday morning, and carriages having been procured from Messrs. Nailor & Bro., they visited the Capitol, where Sergeant-at-Arms French received them, and escorted them through the building. After a drive about the city they returned to the hotel, and at six o'clock the visitors and their enterand at six o'clock the visitors and their enter-tainers partook of a dinner prepared for them by the Messrs. Roessle. At seven o'clock this morning the visitors returned to Richmond, and were conveyed to the steamer Keyport in the conch, accompanied by the committee. Upon arriving at the boat they were placed in charge of Capt. Frank Hollingshead of that steamer, and comfortably provided for.

THE REVOLUTION IT HAYTI-Fall of Port as Prince.—We have published an announcement, by telegraph, of the capture of Port au Prince by the Haytian revolutionists. Later advices state that the attack by sea and land was made simultaneously, in the night, between the 18th and 19th instant. The land force entered the city, drying the different pickets before them, and taking every post of advantage, and the city was in their possession. In the meantime the revolutionary war vessels were doing their part to support the forces on land. The Algonquin, Salnave's vessel, was boarded and taken posses-sion of without bloodshed, the entire crew being son of without bloodshed, the entire crew being asleep at the time. The city and the Algonquin were captured without the revolutionists firing a shot. Salnave made his escape from the city and took refuge in Fort Nationel, commonly called Fort Alexandrie, which is situated on one of the highest points overlooking the city on the northwest side. Salnave is in imminent peril, but it is supposed that the foreign consuls will interfere and secure his safety.

Salnave became conspicuous for the first time

Salnave became conspicuous for the first time in July, 1864, by an attempt to assassinate one of President Geffrard's ministers. He was condemned to death by court-martial, but escaped to St. Domingo, headed a rebellion against defi-rard, and formed a provisional government May 9, 1865. The insurrection was, after several severe struggles, suppressed in November of that year. Salnave renewed the attempt, and succeeded in obtaining supreme power in June, 1867. Geffrard having fied the country. volt against the new Dictator broke out in 1868, and has continued, with varying fortune, until the present time. About two months ago Gen'l Chevalier, the ablest of Salnave's generals, deserted his cause, and since then he has been cooped up in Port au Prince. His reign has covered two years and six months.

paws in cold weather, and of hugging his victims too closely, and besides he was addicted to gambling (gamboling.) Mr. Barr finally concluded by paying a great compliment to man.

Volunteer Toay.—" Veteran journalists—Year THERE would seem to be no doubt, now of the report that Rev. Dr. Osgood, has retired from the Unitarian Church. It is worthy of notice that a Unitarian clergyman who adopts Trinita-rian views seldom connects himself with any of the non-Episcopal sects, but joins either the Protestant Episcopal or the Roman communion. When Dr. Huntington passed from the Unitarian to the Episnopal Church, he gave as a reason the fact that, while the orthodox Congressional and the Proceedings had shown her Forney—fit representative of the City of Brotherly Love." Responded to by Colonel Forney, as follows: reason the fact that, while the orthodox Congregationalists and the Presbyterians had shown him no sympathy during the period in which he was drifting from the theological moorings of his lifetime, the Episcopal clergyman had warmly welcomed his progress toward orthodoxy. Dr. Osgood, however, is said to deny that he has yet joined the Episcopal Church. He says that he has discontinued his connection with the Unitarians, on the score of objecting to sectarianism in any form. He may, in future. the editorial harness, and therefore, standing among men of another and younger generation, I fully appreciate the compliment you have bestowed upon me. If I have any pride in my profession, it consists in the fact that I have never feared to utter my opinions and to advocate them; that I have always recognized my to sectarianism in any form. adversary with courtesy and kindness, and have always endeavored, as far as in me lay, to establish an impersonal example. The stream of defamation and personality which characterizes the American press does much to degrade our great profession. It is unquestionably the highest of all the others—a profession which is the leader and the teacher of the people; and that it should stoop to personalities is a most illogical spectacle. This disposition is not imitated at the bar nor in any other of the professions. In all of them, in fact, there exists an esprit du corps which induces them not only to respect, but to GOV. WALKER, OF VIRGINIA, AND THE COL-ORED PEOPLE.—The colored societies of Richmond celebrated the emancipation proclama-tion on New Year's Day, and called upon Gov. Walker, who made them a speech. He said:— Walker, who made them a speech. He said:—
"Fellow-citizens: I am glad to see you to-day."
He then reverted to the occasion which they celebrated, and told them that they were his peers before the law, and were vested with the same rights and privileges, and he would see that these rights and privileges were secured to them. He would stand by and protect them as far as the power laid with him. He appealed to them to show, by their action, that they appreciated these rights, and what had been called an experiment in regard to the colored people would prove most successful. which induces them not only to respect, but to defend each other against the world outside. As a profession, we are too much in the habit of exposing our own weaknesses, and making ourselves the victims, and, in too many cases, the instruments of others. selves the victims, and, in too many cases, the instruments of others.

Nothing impressed me so much during a short visit abroad as the perfect impersonality of the European journals. They were printed each as if no other paper was printed. They of course copied from each other, but, in very rare instances, did any one journal refer personally to another, and when they discussed a public character, it was always with reference to the measure with which he was identified. A remarkable scene in the history of journalism, and one that all of us should study and be proud of, transpired when Sir Robert Peel retired from public life, and stood up in the House of Commons and paid that wonderful and deserved compliment to the impersonality of the London Times, in which he said that now, at the end of a long career, he took the only opportunity which had been presented to him to return his thanks to a great journal. He had tried to discover the editor of that paper—he had endeavored to find the person who had championed his own policy during these many years; but he had failed to do so, and now, he said, "before my country and the world I desire to not a postwould prove most successful.

ANOTHER TERRIBLE DOMESTIC TRAGEDY—
A Jealous Husband Shoots His Wife and Two Men.—A terrible tragedy occurred at Sleepy Hollow, near Tarrytown, N. Y., on the afternoon of New Year's Day. A man named V. W.
Buckhart shot his wife, a New York merchant named Alfred Randall, and his son, the latter named Charles Randall. Mrs. Buckhart was shot through the temple, Alfred Randall through the heart, and Charles Randall in the side. Mrs. Buckhart and Charles Randall are dead, and Alfred Randall lies in a dangerous condition. Buckhart gave himself up immediately after the occurrence, and was lodged in jail at White Plains. The cause of this shocking tragedy is unknown. Some ascribe it to jealousy, while others believe him insane. ANOTHER TERRIBLE DOMESTIC TRAGEDY-

He reports but a single instance of a failure to obtain the desired right on the proposed route to Aquia Creek, and this, he doubts not, will be speedily settled to the satisfaction of the parties. Mr. Hammond is now engaged on the route to Pope's Creek."
